FOREWORD

The mandatory retirement age for academic members of staff at the University of Nairobi is seventy (70) years. However, the University has been retaining some academic staff in service beyond their retirement age in view of their contribution to the needs and objectives of the University. Retention of such staff has merits in terms of preservation of: institutional memory and knowledge management; mentoring the younger staff; attracting research grants due to their wide networks and exposure; and enhancing institutional image and visibility. However, it is also recognized that retention of staff beyond retirement age has a number of disadvantages. These include: financial pressure to the University in terms of wage bill for staff who may not be fully productive in teaching and research; jeopardizing succession planning.

The Government guidelines on post retirement contract provide that staff retire when they reach retirement age. However under certain circumstances, a University may retain academic staff beyond their retirement age. In order to ensure effective and efficient management of human resource at the University, a structured and objective policy framework is necessary to address the issue of post-retirement contracts for academic staff while taking into consideration the institutional dynamics of the University and in compliance with Government policy and constitutional provisions.

The general implications of this Policy are that staff will have to undergo a performance evaluation prior to being offered a post-retirement contract. Such a contract will be for a period of two (2) years, renewable only once upon satisfactory performance.

DEFINITION OF TERMS

“Academic Staff” means any person employed by University of Nairobi to teach and conduct research on contract or on permanent and pensionable terms

“Employer” means University of Nairobi

“Post-retirement” means the period after staff attains the mandatory retirement age of seventy (70) years
1.0 INTRODUCTION

The University has experienced an increasing number of academic staff who request for extension of service past the mandatory retirement age of seventy (70) years. The circular from the Chief of Staff and Head of Public Service Ref. OP/CAB.2/7A dated February 14, 2014 directed that on attainment of retirement age, staff must leave service. This is because retention of staff beyond their retirement age has challenges in terms of wage bill sustainability, parity of treatment and equity. However, it is worth noting that the University operates under special environments that may require extension of service for some academic staff beyond their retirement age. Currently, the University of Nairobi has no policy guidelines on extension of service beyond retirement. It is therefore important to develop policy guidelines to efficiently manage the administration of post-retirement contracts.
